RINA-certified, mahogany-lined, and nothing to prove.

---

Caner IV is a 36-metre VIP gulet built under RINA surveillance — an international classification standard that most charter yachts never pursue. The hull is framed in acajou, the cabins panelled in mahogany, and the deck laid in Burmese teak. These aren't cosmetic choices. They're structural ones, and they show in the way the boat holds together after nearly two decades of service.

Six cabins sit below deck: two masters with private jacuzzis, two doubles with massage showers, and two twins — all with plasma screens, individual climate control, and safes. It's the kind of fit-out that belongs in a boutique hotel, except the view changes every morning.

A crew of six runs everything — captain, chef, and four sailors who know the coast well enough to suggest the anchorage you didn't know about. Twin 500 HP Iveco engines and 600 square metres of sail give Caner IV the range to cover serious distance when the wind is right, and the power to move when it isn't.

Thirty-six metres of RINA-certified gulet — acajou frame, Burmese teak deck, and 600 square metres of sail.

LAYOUT

How the space works.

---

Caner IV's lower deck holds all six cabins in a symmetrical arrangement. The two master suites sit aft — the widest part of the hull — each with jacuzzi bathrooms and full entertainment systems. Two doubles occupy the midship section, and two twins are positioned forward. All cabins are individually air-conditioned and fully en-suite. Crew quarters are completely separate, with their own access and galley line.

2 MASTER CABINS

Full-width suites at the stern, each with a jacuzzi bathroom, plasma TV, DVD, satellite, music system with iPod dock, and a personal safe. The widest cabins aboard.

2 DOUBLE CABINS

Midship doubles with en-suite massage showers, individual climate control, plasma screens, and the same entertainment fit-out as the masters.

2 TWIN CABINS

Forward twins with en-suite massage showers, two single beds each, and the full AV package. Same standard of finish — no compromise on the forward cabins.
