FRIG COLLECTION

We know where to go.

Twenty metres of ketch, and a crew who know every cove.

Ceylan is a 20-metre ketch built for the kind of trip where size works in your favour. At six guests and three cabins, she's small enough to tuck into anchorages that the bigger boats pass by — the shallow bays, the quieter inlets, the places that feel like yours for the afternoon.

A single master and two doubles sit below deck, each with en-suite bathrooms and air conditioning. The saloon is compact but properly finished, and the cockpit becomes the centre of daily life — meals, reading, watching the coast slide past. A 360 HP Iveco engine gives her enough range for repositioning, and 5,000 litres of fresh water means she doesn't need to run to port every other day.

A crew of three handles everything — navigation, cooking, anchoring — with the kind of quiet attention that comes from knowing this coastline season after season.

Small enough to anchor in the bays that the bigger boats sail past — and quiet enough to hear the water.

The saloon — compact, warm, and finished with the same care as a boat twice her size.

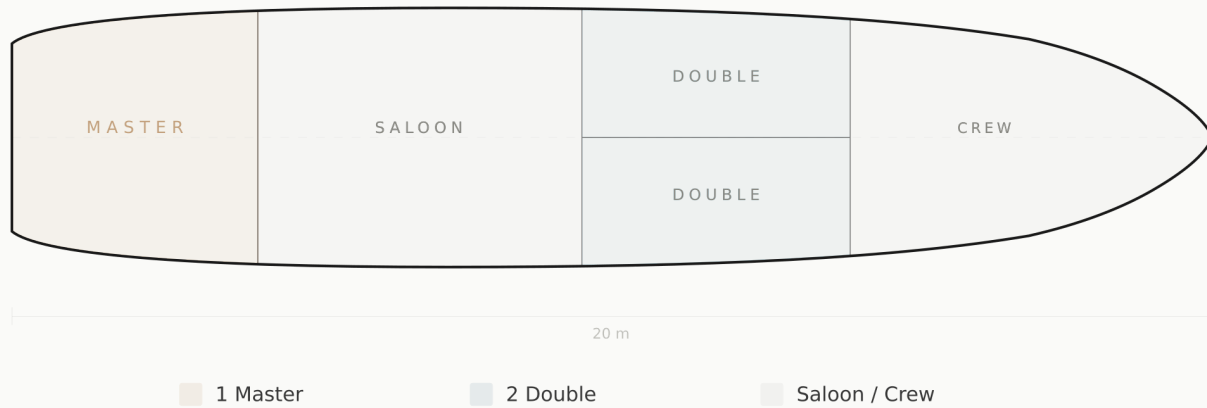

Three cabins below deck, each with en-suite bathroom and air conditioning. No detail skipped.

LAYOUT

How the space works.

Ceylan's layout is straightforward and well-proportioned. The master cabin sits aft with the most space and natural light, while two double cabins occupy the forward section — each with en-suite facilities and its own ventilation. The saloon connects directly to the cockpit, so the transition between inside and outside is barely noticeable. Crew quarters are fully separate.

MASTER CABIN

Aft-positioned master with double bed, en-suite bathroom, air conditioning, and the widest footprint aboard. The most private cabin, with direct access to natural light.

2 DOUBLE CABINS

Forward doubles with double beds, en-suite bathrooms, and individual climate control. Compact but well-finished — the same standard as the master, in a tighter frame.
